CHIMINAL SESSIONS. BEFORE Mr. JUSTICE SNOWDEN. PIRACY IN THE HARBOUR BY QUASI-CUSTOMS

The six priseners found guilty on Wednesday of piracy in the harbour were now brought up for Being asked what they had to say why sen tence should not be massed upon them, all said they were not guilty but had simply done their duty in obedience to their orders. His Lordship said the prisoners had been found guilty of committing a very daring outram in the waters of the larbour of Hougkong, an English Colony. The jury had found them quilty of making a piratical attack and attempt.

ing to steal opium from a person who was making use of the waters of the Colony for the purpose of his business. Any person who complied with the regulations for the sale of opium in this Colony had a right to convey it from one part of the harbour to another without any interference whatever, and it did not matter whether [31] it was to be smuggled or not. As defence, the prisoners had set up that they were acting under the orders of an officer of the Chinese Customs who was commanding a steam launch lying at Yow Mah Tee. That person had been sough for everywhere and could not be found, and the trial had been but off for some weeks to enable the prisoners to obtain his attendance from Canton if he had gond there. If such an officer had given any such orders he did not wonder that ne did not attend. The prisoners said the man was here but would > not come forward. because if he gave the orders he was said to have done they were entirely unjustifiable and he by the Chinese authorities at Canton. It was quite clear, however, that the jury could hardly have believed their defence, aspecially as part of

THE POWERS AND TURKEY. Colonel Sir Lewis Pelly, in a letter to The Times, says: There lately again seen a little out of the range of the goologist, and scarcely of Turkey. The natural sichuses and capabilities within that of the botanist. of her regions are well known, while the people of Turkey are dooile, brave casily governed and apainy and raspect. But I have come away with the conviction that the Turkish Government—that is to say: the Turkish govern ing class, as distinguished from the people-is no better than any demoralised mativet Asiati Government with which I had previously made acquaintance; and that for England to unhold such a Government, more especially to uphold it for British Indian, party, or other seifist interests, without protesting the people Turkey by securing practical administrative reforms, would be an intelerable policy. do not hastily commit myself to any opinion on affairs and I rerely venture to criticise those who practise the complex, delicate, and uncertain art of statesmanship; but when I consider the atter vomility of the Turkish Administration in all its departments—revenue judiciary, finance, public works or no works—the recklessuess with which the metal currency is suddenly depreciated. while the paper currency is simply repudiated by the Government which issued it; when I recall the inscourity of property, the anarchy in Asia Minor, the insune oppression on the part of many local authorities, the heedlessness and selfish ambitions of the central authorities at Constantinople, I stand amazed at the condition to which the visinertic and immorality of the Turkish governing class and the interventions without practical reforming effects of foreign Powers in particular of Great Britain have reduced these most highly favoured regions of the Old World. Had we, in the beginning, while ad. mitting the beinges of this Government, stood wholly aloof, awaiting the insvitable end; had we simply declared that, although we disapproved, we were not responsible for Turkish rule, and · that we did not purpose to interfere until its dissolution should compel us to look to our own interests in the reorganisation of the component parts of the Turnish Empire, I could at least have understood (though I should not have fallon in with this line of thought) and have deemed it consistent with the honour of a country some of whose stafosmen might consider its present colonial and other liabilities as great as it could prudently bear. But. when we interfere to support such a Government against internal resistance and aggression from without, and take upon ourselves public obligations involving administrative reforms, we are surely bound to give practical effect to these obligations, and secure the territories in which we intervene against permanent insufferable misrule. Not that I would desire to see any newfangled Constitution of the West patched upon this essentially Oriental State; but I believe it to be both practicable and our self-imposed duty akin to the false augustum; its effects are simi. PLAYING WITH FIRE. The Standard observes :- "A political part generally sets itself the tasks to which it must batake itself when it obtains power, by its attitude and language when in Opposition. Mr. Gladstone has pledged blinself to be what he considers onergetic, and other people call verations; and he must rodcom some of his profuse pleages. We have seen how he proposes to do so at home. STANDARD But a similar Nemesia compels him to adopt a dangerous conrae of action in his intervention abroad. The difficulties with which the Eastern Question bristles were always represented by Mr. Gladstone, in the day of his greater freedom and less responsibility as difficulties either wilfully created by Lord Beaconstield and Lord Salisbury, or difficulties which they were too lethangle to remove. He is therefore bound to attempt their removal, Hence the Circular Note of Lord Granville, and the ostentations despatch of Mr. Goschen to Constantinople. The Eastern Question is reopened once more and strangely enough, by the Cabinet of Mr. Gladstone. No doubt the Prime Minister, dreading to be reminded of his past vehement criticism, feels bound to put the strongest pressure on the Sablime Porto to NEW YORK, CHICAGO, CINCINNATI compel it to satisfy European public opinion. It was not to be expeoted that the Powers addressed by Earl Granville would receive his communication with neglect or discourtesy, or even with a want of cordiality. But it requires people to be very shallow or very sanguine to imagine that the European concert is thereby restored, if, indeed it was ever broken. In spite of the sonorous and, to some people, comforting, phrases Mr. Gladatone and his colleagues have put into the Queen's Speech on this subject, it will yet be discovered that European concert concerning the Eastern Question is all but impossible, and that to press for it is only to socierate the advent of something very difference.
